

---

About the Authors

Mercedes González de la Rocha is a Mexican social anthropologist who works as a Professor and Researcher at the Centro de Investigaciones y Estudios Superiores en Antropología Social (CIESAS) in Guadalajara, México. She is the author of The Resources of Poverty: Women and Survival in a Mexican City (1994), among many other books and publications on the topic of the social organisation of households and household economy.

Alejandro Grinspun is a sociologist from Argentina whose interests include the dynamics of poverty and the political economy of social policy formation. He did his Doctoral work in Political Science at Columbia University and, since 1994, has worked as an Advisor on poverty issues in the Bureau for Development Policy of UNDP, New York.

Jaroslav Górníak is a sociologist and economist, specialising in methodology of social research and data analysis. Dr. Górníak is an Adjunct Professor at the Institute of Sociology, Jagiellonian University in Krakow, Poland, and researcher and lecturer at Malopolska School of Public Administration, Krakow University of Economics. He is a consultant on research methods and data analysis at SPSS Polska Ltd.

Julia Harrington has social science and law degrees from Harvard University, Massachusetts, USA. She is co-founder and Executive Director of the Institute for Human Rights and Development in Africa, which uses African human rights law to advance human rights and human development through litigation and training.

Alf Morten Jerve is a social anthropologist with more than 20 years experience in development-related research, consultancy and operational work, with a major focus on rural development in poor areas. This includes studies of agro-pastoralism, traditional water transport and integrated rural development and local government. He is presently Assistant Director at the Chr. Michelsen Institute in Bergen, Norway.

Julian May is an Associate Professor in the School of Development Studies at the University of Natal, South Africa. His research interest is in the dynamic analysis of poverty and the relationship between persistent poverty, asset accumulation and sustainable livelihoods. He has published almost 50 articles in both South African and international books and journals.

Siddiq Osmani is Professor of Development Economics at the University of Ulster, United Kingdom. He previously worked at the World Institute for Development Economics Research and the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies. His research interests include poverty, inequality, hunger, famine and nutrition, and development problems in general. He is currently Special Adviser to the United Nations High Commissioner on Human Rights on matters related to economic rights.

Catherine Porter is a development economist with interests in welfare economics and labour markets in developing countries. She is currently working as a Fellow of the Overseas Development Institute (ODI) in the UK.

Sanjay Reddy is an Assistant Professor of Economics at Barnard College, Columbia University. He holds a Ph.D. in economics from Harvard University. His current work relates to development economics, political economy and international economics. He has authored numerous articles on the role of the state in basic social service provision.

Pierre Hassan Sanon is a sociologist with expertise in social and community-based development. He has 12 years of experience in managing field programmes in developing countries in relation to social development and poverty reduction. To date, he has been employed by the French Cooperation Agency, UNDP, UNICEF, ADB, European Union, and the World Bank.